

Optimistic fantasy

Danish artist Anette Walther's inspiration for her work is the universe of fantasies and feelings that come about from her everyday life. As well, the Denmark-based artist is highly influenced by colors, atmosphere and impressions from her trips to Africa, Hawaii, Europe, Iceland, Bali, and Cuba.

Working mostly with acrylic paint on canvas, Walther's works are playfully abstract, yet contain recognizable graphic elements that exude optimism and serenity. She is mostly attracted to strong color. The artist's creative background is wide, having studied at numerous art schools in Europe during the past 15 years. Today, Walther teaches art at a high school and owns her own gallery.

Walther exhibits her work regularly in galleries, museums, hotels and as part of several art organizations in Denmark, Italy, Germany, United States, and Canada.

"We are very happy to represent Anette Walther. Her dreamy paintings and exquisite color palette are always a highlight in our gallery," says Joyce Fournier, director of Toronto-based STUDIO VOGUE GALLERY. "Collectors come back again and again to enjoy and to purchase her work."

Several of the artist's new works will hang at the gallery in its upcoming group exhibition, Essays in Composition, October 3-24. ●
